

Putting the power in your hands to choose your electric generation supplier began with the 1997 Electricity Generation Choice and Competition Act. Under the law, electric rates were capped to ease the transition to competitive markets. All rate caps will be expired by Dec. 31, 2010.

Just like you shop for other services, you can shop for generation supply, making a decision based on your own needs and preferences. Generation supply costs comprise the majority of the average electric bill. You can shop based on price, environmental preferences or special services and deals. Consumers are encouraged to proactively engage competitive suppliers.

The power to switch means you could save money on your electric bill.

With the expiration of electric rate caps, you may see an increase in your electric bill. But depending on where you live, you may be able to save money by switching your electric supplier.

In Pennsylvania, you can choose the company that generates your electricity—also known as your electric supplier. This means you have the power to switch to a competing supplier who may offer the lowest price, or provide a specific service you want such as green/renewable energy. With PA PowerSwitch.com, the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission (PUC) is working to make sure you have the tools at your fingertips to make an informed decision.

Most Pennsylvania residents have the right to choose their electric supplier, but your ability to switch depends on where you live.
